- I think Dr. Sena was a fantastic teacher that encouraged engagement with the students. While some of the D2L site was a bit disorganized and cobbled together. It appears to be a matter of Dr. Sena being provided a mix of materials from previous years. Dr. Sena was always quick to act in correcting any issues on the website. The coursework was challenging but respectful of students' time.
- There was a complete lack of professionalism in the sense of: 1. Course links were almost always broken 2. The rubrics were very unclear on what should be delivered and graded 3. Instructions for deliverables often conflicted with other directions in other places 4. The course was obviously a concoction of other professor's work (at least 2) and this led to very unstructured flow 5. Grading seemed completely random. Fractions of points deducted often with no explanation. Just to name a name a few of the highlights.
- Sena was great Instructor and very helpful
- This felt like it should have been 100% asynchronous class. The amount of course work plus the 3 hour meetings seemed like overkill, especially the way that the content is set up. Also, the teacher was a very harsh grader. If I'm not getting 100%, I would like feedback on how to get to 100% and sometimes that didn't happen. Finally, my suggestion, instead of asking for volunteers to answer the questions so it ends up being the same 3 or 4 people answering, the teacher should call on everyone so that it forces people to pay attention and participate. That way we're not sitting in silence while we're waiting for someone else to speak up and give an example on the subject.
- The class had too much work, we barely learnt anything, and it felt like I taught myself the whole semester.
- Sena was a great proffessor
- Many other classmates I talked to experienced the same issues as I did. That is, the inability to complete most assignments on time due to directions that do not match what is shown on the SAP interface.
- Great Teacher!
