Qualitative

Comments -

- Over the course of the semester, I began to feel that the professor's behavior in our class was not entirely fair or consistent toward all students. Specifically, I noticed what seemed like a pattern of discrimination against a certain group of students. At one point, the professor assigned students into groups in a way that clearly separated this particular group from others. Although it was framed as part of the class structure, the division felt intentional and uncomfortable, especially because those of us who were not part of that group were placed together in ways that didn't seem random. It created a noticeable separation in the classroom dynamic. More concerning was the difference in the professor's demeanor when interacting with students from that group. When they asked questions, she often responded with visible irritation or impatience. Her tone would change, becoming less welcoming, more abrupt, and at times dismissive. In contrast, when students from the other group asked questions, she was consistently warm, attentive, and encouraging. She smiled more, used friendly tones, and seemed genuinely engaged in helping them. This difference in attitude was not subtle and made the classroom feel less inclusive and respectful. While it's difficult to prove intent, the emotional contrast in her responses felt unfair and created a learning environment where not all students felt equally valued or respected. The favoritism or what could be perceived as implicit bias undermined the trust and sense of safety that is essential in an educational setting. I am sharing this not to accuse, but because I believe it is important to raise concerns when something does not feel right. Every student deserves to be treated with equal respect, regardless of background or identity.
- A great course with plenty of group work and individual learning!
- Sena it was a pleasure to be in your class! I enjoyed my time and listening to your lectures! I really LOVED this class and I learned so much. Looking forward to predictive analysis next!
- I enjoyed this course especially because of the professor. She made it flexible and taught the class amazingly. 100% recommend this professor. An amazing professor.
- I was expecting more hands-on experience with Pivot Tables and charts. The team did all the work for me, and I didn't get a proper opportunity to participate. On the upside, it was a good introduction to the course.
